When cats become frightened of something, they run up a tree and then cry sadly until they are rescued. There is, in reality, a reasonable explanation for this type of behavior, and it has to do with the shape of the cat's claws. A cat's claws are hooked in a direction that makes climbing up a tree a rather easy task, but when they want to climb down, these claws are not very helpful.

- V. Read an excerpt from an interview with Jason Momoa about the movie Aquaman.

Jason Momoa as Aquaman

by Rüdiger Sturm

Interviewer: In Aquaman, you play the heir to the throne of the underwater kingdom of Atlantis. What do you think makes a good king?

Jason Momoa: Compassion, strength, vulnerability, and love. It takes all of that to be a king. You have to think of others, take care of them, and be selfless.

Interviewer: So are you a king?

Jason Momoa: Not really, but I'm working on it. It's about believing in yourself and knowing the beauty you have inside. My character in Aquaman goes on a hero's journey and he becomes a king in the end.

Interviewer: Have you had any real-life adventures in the ocean?

Jason Momoa: Once, I went on a big surfing trip and nearly drowned—my friends couldn't get to me because the waves were too big. It was terrifying. I prayed to my ancestors, to my grandmother and grandfather. It was only when I hit a reef in the middle of the ocean that I managed to dig my feet in so my friends could see where I was and get to me.

Interviewer: You studied marine biology in college. What prompted that decision?

I'm just a fan of nature, of the world, of the Earth. I wanted to spend my life trying to save the oceans, working with animals, and trying to find cures for diseases. It's tough because there are so many things to do in this lifetime: my artistic career, being a father, giving back what I owe this Earth as a human being. I want to bring awareness and solutions—that's why I'm working with a charity organization called WATERisLIFE. It's about getting fresh water to people in need, cleaning the oceans, and stopping the waste and plastics that we use in our everyday lives.

- VI. Write an article reporting the questions and answers given in the previous interview.

- The interviewer asked Jason Momoa if he had ever had any real-life adventures in the ocean.
- Jason Momoa replied that he had gone on a big surfing trip once and had nearly drowned - his friends couldn't get to him because the waves were too big. He said it had been terrifying. He had prayed to his ancestors, grandmother and grandfather.
